YORUBA GALEDE MASK

Nigeria
Height 8" 12" L in

PROVENANCE
Ex Merton Simpson
Ex Eric Robertson

Yoruba Gelede masks are worn by male dancers in festivals honoring the powerful spiritual and physical influence of women, particularly elder women and ancestors, known as "our mothers" or awọn iwa ya. These performances use dance and elaborate masks to entertain the community, provide social commentary, and encourage these powerful figures to use their abilities for the community's benefit.

Seiber, Roy and Frank Herreman, Hair in African Art and Culture - Status, Symbols and Style, Prestel, 2000, p. 192 for a similar figure formerly in the Leon and Fern Wallace Collection and probably by the same hand.

Robbins and Nooter note (ibid., p. 206), "Large figural sculpture, stylistically related to that of the Anyi, is rare."

"Like akuaba, larger figural sculptures have many functions. A considerable variety of forms exist, yet only in a few instances can we be sure of the original contexts and precise meanings, as there is rarely a form-function relationship. [. . .]

The standing female icon common in West African sculpture has various interpretations. In these Akan examples, poise, dignity, and stability are the keynotes. Inheritance and succession follow the female line; women must be strong, solidly rooted to earth but upright on it." (Cole, Herbert & Doran Ross, The Arts of Ghana, UCLA Museum of Cultural History, 1977, pp. 107-113)
